

Video Cassette Recycling

Video cassettes have been replaced by DVD's and other improving technologies. This has resulted in thousands of unwanted tapes being taken to landfills which are polluting our environment.

If you still have a video tape player, a good way to help the environment is to give your unwanted videos away rather than throw them in the bin. You could give them to a friend or to a charity shop.

If you wish to buy different films to watch on video, good places to look are in charity shops or on websites such as Amazon.co.uk and ebay.co.uk.

Some nurseries and schools may take used video tapes if they are appropriate and suitable for their needs.

www.tapesuk.co.uk

This website provides a large range of recycled tapes for sale. It is better for the environment if you buy recycled tapes; if you buy recycled products less of the worlds resources will be used up, saving energy and meaning less waste will be sent to landfill sites.

www.therecyclingpeople.co.uk

Keymood UK is a company situated in Herefordshire which deals in electronic equipment and plastics. They provide a service of secure destruction of media, such as CD's, VHS cassettes etc and supply re-grinding materials. By selling the waste products to Keymood, companies will save money on landfill costs and help the environment.